Torpy's Restaurant, in Braidwood, is for the lovers of fine food, history and atmosphere; for those who want to get away from it all. Torpy's restaurant is situated in a renovated 100 year old colonial cottage in the main street of historic Braidwood. The restaurant has 4 dining areas, each with an open fireplace, and the atmosphere is relaxed and informal, with fresh flowers on pine tables and rural views through lace curtains. The menu is a la carte and has won wide acclaim, as has the warm friendly service. Most popular of the dishes are an entree of brains in waistcoats of bacon, a mouth watering pepper steak wrapped in filo pastry and a delightful version of chocolate marquis.

The restaurant is fully licensed. Torpy's epitomizes the best of Braidwood, where past and present are interwoven and enrich each other; landmark churches, old time pubs, galleries, craft and antique shops, in sensitively restored buildings.

'Idioms in mixed mediums'

Humor, more pointed than funny, is the thread of continuity throughout Susan Dorothea White's art, regardless of medium. A case in point is 'The Long Arm of the Law'. It is created with exactly what the title states ... a very long black-robed arm extends out into the gallery room with a legal document in its hand! The tabletop sculptures are sophisticated and titillating ... 'Close-Knit Family', — family members' heads are 'knitted' together ... 'To Cut Both Ways', — crossed scissor blades are sharpened on both edges ... 'Shy Egg' is attempting to conceal itself, and 'Stretching the Imagination' depicts distorted features, stretched eye sockets. Susan

Dorothea White has exhibited her art consistently since graduating from the South Australian School of Art. Her work appeared in solo exhibitions, group exhibitions, and International Biennales in Germany, Spain, Australia, Italy, China, Poland, Canada, Yugoslavia and France. Many honors have been bestowed upon her and she has received numerous awards over the years, among them the John Gero Painting Prize, Macquarie University and the Mornington Peninsula Print Purchase Award. Her work is in public, private and museum collections worldwide. She is cited in Who's Who in International Art.
